WELLBEING WITH PROVEN RESULTS

WellSpark works to understand people and provide solutions that address every dimension of their lives, seeing people as the sum of all their experiences. Employees may lack a support system...have untreated mental health issues...cultural differences...and socioeconomic struggles, just to mention a few. These challenges can create barriers that compromise wellbeing. Enlightened employers understand that the health of employees equals the health of the business. At WellSpark, we focus on keeping people out of the traditional "sick care" system. We work with employees to manage and prevent chronic disease by helping them identify and remove the barriers that are preventing them from making lasting change. We connect people's experiences to their health and data, and then meet people where they are with support that makes sense for their individual circumstances.

CUSTOMIZED TO SPARK CHANGE

All WellSpark solutions approach wellbeing using a biopsychosocial lens that is the core of our business and what sets us apart. The combination of programs as well as the programs themselves can be unique to each organization, customizable and designed to support engagement and spark behavior change. WellSpark programs are easy to access and offer a wide range of resources for each individual with the support that meets their needs. Resources range from a full catalog of on-demand health education and challenges, to WellSpark Health Coach Educators and Nurse Wellness Coaches who provide group programs as well as one-on-one support by phone, virtually or on-site. Because organizations can be as diverse as individuals, WellSpark works closely with clients to assemble the programs and the robust tracking and reporting necessary to meet the unique needs of each population.

WELLSPARK'S LIFE-DIMENSIONAL APPROACH

Whole-person health includes biological, psychological and social factors. Biological factors (i.e. age, gender, biometrics) provide a solid foundation to start building our care approach. Psychological factors (i.e. experiences, thought patterns, emotions and feelings) help us understand how people perceive the world, which is critical to identify the support individuals want, need, and most importantly, will accept. Social factors (i.e. relationships, work, finances) help us provide the social support system needed to help individuals improve their wellbeing. This life-dimensional, biopsychosocial lens, paired with valid, reliable wellbeing assessment tools, help people uncover the small action steps that lead to lasting results.

One size does not fit all. WellSpark programs are built to be flexible and adaptable to work with each organization. Our bottom line is to ensure we meet your goals and your budget. That's why our pricing model is designed like our solutions – unique. Most of our coaching solutions are billed by consumption. SparkHealth Digital and Activation services are a fixed cost and billed monthly, and Diabetes Prevention Programs may be eligible to be billed through your health plan.

WellSpark is much more than a self-help wellness portal. WellSpark's customized wellbeing support, along with one-on-one and group coaching, works collaboratively alongside other employee benefits to help guide
